

GOING FURTHER - Resources

Recommended Books:

How am I Smart? A Parent's Guide to Multiple Intelligences (Koch)* "How am I smart?" When parents determine ways children can be smart, they'll better understand their children's educational needs and how they learn best.

For the Children's Sake (Macaulay)* An engaging, practical and inspiring treatise on how to extend learning to every aspect of life, instilling in children a richness and joy for living and learning.

Going Public: Your Child Can Thrive in Public School (Pritchard) * Public, Private, Homeschool- Christian parents face tough choices for their child's education. Help your kids thrive whatever their learning environment!

GOING FURTHER – Church Support

At Mattis Avenue Free Methodist Church we have parents in every category: Those who have chosen public school, private school, and home schooling for a variety of reasons. As discussed in question four, there are parents who would be happy to talk with you about their choices and help you weigh alternatives. We also have several public and private school teachers in our congregation. Talk to Pastor Herb, Donna Yardy, or Adrienne Olson to get connected with one of these families or teachers as you weigh alternatives for your child's education.

Judah Christian School, www.judah.org Judah has been a popular choice with families in our congregation, both for preschool and K-12 programs.

Your Child's Schooling Options

HomePointe
Pointers

Your Child's Schooling Options

*From Staff at Mattis Avenue Free Methodist Church
With Kurt Bruner, The Center for Strong Families*

Parents today often feel like they fail to measure up in their responsibilities—especially in something as challenging as giving their children a good education in an increasingly complex world. As you evaluate the many schooling options available to your family, reflect on the following questions to help apply Biblical wisdom to your educational choices.

QUESTION ONE: Who has ultimate responsibility?

Children are wired to observe and learn about all kinds of things in life—from friends, family, church, television and so on. But what is your role? What part do you play in what they learn and how they find their place in the world? Is one form of education better than another? Is your child okay in the public school? Is a private school or home schooling better?

The answer will vary from situation to situation. The most important thing to remember is that you have ultimate responsibility for the education of your child(ren). Deuteronomy 6:6-7 tells us: "These commandments that I give you today are to be upon your hearts. Impress them on your children. Talk about them when you sit at home and when you walk along the road, when you lie down and when you get up."

Parents in all different times and places have found value working with other people (including schools) to partner toward a strong education. But delegation does not remove the responsibility for oversight. It takes diligence to make sure that the people to whom you grant some of the training work are performing well and enhancing rather than undermining your efforts.

QUESTION TWO: What is best for each child?

Your oversight of each element of your child's education should be coupled with an annual assessment of your child's education needs. You should evaluate each child at the start of every school year and then commit to the plan that works best. Some parents move from one option to another based upon what they believe will best meet a child's needs rather than feel "locked in" to any one approach. And remember, the same schooling option may not be the best for every child in the family.

QUESTION THREE: How do we keep faith a priority?

Everyone wants his or her child to succeed in life, but what does success look like? Does getting into a great college and then landing a dream job define success? Is it about being well rounded with skills in a broad range of extracurricular activities? Too often, well-meaning parents seeking to give their children an edge for the future load up their schedules with activities that can squeeze out time for family and faith. But it's the investment in family time that deepens the roots of faith, character, relationship and other non-academic priorities.

QUESTION FOUR: Who can give advice and guidance?

It is always wise to ask those who have chosen different schooling options (including public, charter, private and home education) for insights on the good and bad of each. Since all of us tend to advocate the option we have chosen you may encounter those who seem to have a "one size fits all" perspective. That's okay. Just listen and learn so that you can gain as much insight as possible as you prayerfully evaluate your own child's situation.